

CRN GM research ambassadors full of enthusiasm

CRN GM welcomed a number of our Patient Research Ambassadors (PRAs) to a lively session to agree a PRA strategy for the coming year.

Ambassadors old and new attended Citylabs on Thursday 27 June for the get-together convened by Janet Eastwood, Head of Communications, and Angela Parker, Research Delivery Manager.

Among the new attendees was former CRN GM colleague Jan Cashen. Despite being retired, Jan was extra keen to get back involved with research in an ambassadorial capacity and we're delighted to have her on board with the initiative.

The PRAs had a range of ideas for how they would like to shape the role, with an emphasis on developing a suite of resources for them to utilise and to help dispel common myths around clinical research.

One of the PRA's said: "It was a really inspiring meeting and there was a lot energy in the room - it has given me lots of ideas about raising awareness of research."
